

THE APPEAL PROCESS

Can I appeal my suspension?

You can appeal the outcome of your case for one or more of three reasons:

- The sanctions and/or conditions of sanctions are extraordinarily disproportionate to the violation(s); and/or
- A procedural defect occurred that significantly impacted the outcome of the hearing; and/or
- Discovery of new and significant information that could have affected the outcome of the hearing and that was not known, or could not reasonably have been known and/or presented at the time of the hearing.

Information on the appeal process here.

Students are formally notified once their outcome letter is emailed. You have five (5) business days from the date of notification to submit your appeal once you have been formally notified of your suspension. You also have five (5) business days from notification of your first level of appeal status to submit your second level of appeal, should your first level not yield any changes (see "How long will it be until I know the outcome of my appeal?" below).

REFUNDS AND FINANCIAL INFORMATION

Will I get my tuition money back?

Students who are suspended are subject to the university's refund schedule. Typically, suspensions that occur after the second week in the semester will not result in a refund. In rare instances, a student's hearing may be delayed, typically during a semester break. If a student's suspension was delayed due to CSSR's inability to schedule a hearing, CSSR will provide the student a letter of support for use in the tuition appeal process. Information on the refund schedule and the tuition appeal process is available on the Parent's Guide to the Refund Schedule.

Will I get my room and board money back?

It is important to know that there is a difference between tuition/fees reimbursement (see "Will I get my tuition money back?" above) and the costs associated with room and board. Room and board refunds are determined by the Office of Housing and Residence Life (HRL) and additional information on the schedule of refund amounts can be found at HRL Room and Board Refund Schedule.

If you are suspended during a break or intercession, you will need to contact HRL at 740.593.4090 or hrl@university.edu to coordinate your checkout. If your property remains in your room as you appeal the original suspension, you will be charged according to the refund schedule.

How do I appeal my suspension?

You should contact Student Financial Aid and Scholarships at 740.593.4141 or financialaid@university.edu to inquire about potential effects of a suspension on your financial aid and/or scholarships. If you have private scholarships, you may need to directly contact the organizations that sponsor those scholarships to get clarification.
